

Lambton College Offers International Foundation Year at Willis College in Ottawa

SARNIA, Ont., September 15, 2006 - Lambton College has signed an agreement with the historic Willis College of Business and Technology in Ottawa to offer two of its high quality, career-focused programs to students in that area.

Starting this fall, the Ottawa college will offer a one-year International Foundation Year (Pre-University) program to prepare high school students for direct entry into select Canadian and U.S. universities, and a two-year co-op Business program that will develop the knowledge and skills for the graduates to build a career in business and industry.

"We're extremely pleased to partner with Willis College and provide students in the Ottawa area with a solid foundation from which to launch successful careers. It's quite an achievement that the Lambton College community now stretches all the way across this province," said Bob Henry, Dean, School of International Studies, Lambton College.

Students will be registered with Lambton College, and receive all the rights and privileges available to those at its home campus in Sarnia. Courses will be identical and Lambton College will award the diploma or certificate.

For more than 110 years, Willis College has been evolving and innovating to become a global provider of applied education and training at the forefront of technological change. Willis is a career-focused college specializing in clean/renewable energy, information technology, e-business, business, language, early childhood education sectors and degree completion programs with co-operative colleges and universities in Canada.
